*From 3 January 2022, the interviews for the consumer confidence survey have taken place Monday to Sunday. Previously they were done at the weekend (Saturday and Sunday).

Higher interest rates, lower confidence

- Consumer confidence sank 4.5% last week, more than offsetting the gains over the previous three weeks. Confidence fell across all the mainland states with major declines in NSW, SA and WA.
- 'Weekly inflation expectations' increased 0.1ppt to 5.6%, while its four-week moving average fell 0.1ppt to 5.7%.
- All the five confidence subindices declined. 'Current financial conditions' dropped 1.9%. 'Future financial conditions' decreased 5.5% reversing the 5.3% gain the week before.
- 'Current economic conditions' plunged 10.2%, falling to its lowest level since September 2020. 'Future economic conditions' lost 2.1% after a 3.6% increase the week before.
- 'Time to buy a major household item' decreased 4%.

ANZ Head of Australian Economics, David Plank, commented:

Consumer confidence declined 4.5% last week, to its lowest levels since April 2020, as the RBA increased interest rates by 50bp for the third month in a row to 1.85%. Household inflation expectations increased 0.1ppt to 5.6% despite petrol prices falling for a fourth consecutive week. Demand for housing has been dropping, along with house prices. That and rising interest rates caused confidence among homeowners to drop 7% last week. So far in 2022, household spending has been robust despite very weak consumer sentiment, with strong employment gains, high levels of household saving and a desire to travel more than offsetting concerns about the rising cost of living. It remains to be seen whether this divergence between confidence and spending can continue. Certainly, we expect employment to remain robust through 2022 and wages growth to pick up. This may be enough to keep households spending, even if they feel wary about the outlook.
