ANZ-Roy Morgan Consumer Confidence and inflation expectations

ANZ Head of Australian Economics, David Plank, commented:

Consumer confidence dropped 1.5% last week as the RBA raised interest rates by 25bp. This was a sixth consecutive weekly decline in confidence, taking the index to levels last seen in early April 2020. Household inflation expectations climbed to 6.8%, its highest level since these data were first collected in April 2010. Falling confidence and rising inflation expectations creates a difficult mix for the RBA. Consumer concerns about the economy are reflected in the 'economic conditions next year' subindex, which has dropped seven times over the past nine weeks for a total decline of 17%. Confidence among people paying off their mortgages surprisingly increased 2.6% but remained lower than those who own their home (down 3.1%) or those renting (down 2.6%).
