ANZ appoints Chief Technology Officer

ANZ today announced the appointment of Tim Hogarth as its new Chief Technology Officer, reporting to ANZ Group Executive Technology, Gerard Florian.

Previously ANZ's Chief Architect, as CTO Tim will look at ANZ's longer term technology requirements to make sure decisions and investments meet those needs in the future, as well as today.

Commenting on the appointment, Gerard Florian said: "I'm really pleased to have Tim in this new role, which we created to reflect the importance of technology leadership within my team and across ANZ more broadly.

"In recent years Tim has helped us make great progress in further strengthening our architecture objectives and driving ongoing improvements in our engineering standards.

"This track record and Tim's reputation for being thoughtful, engaging and enthusiastic about all aspects of technology make him a great fit for this new role," Mr Florian said.

As CTO, Tim will play a key role in ensuring ANZ's many technology projects align with business plans, and will continue to be accountable for ANZ's technology architecture.

He will also continue to drive ongoing improvements across engineering and further extend ANZ's move towards common technology platforms.

Tim commences in the role effective immediately.
